MORNING LEADER OFFICE, WEDNESDAY EVENING, April 28, 1863. After numerous a opposes rendered necessary by he duties attending the obsequits connected with the death of President Lincoln, business was one ore resumed in New York to-day, and as no forther interruptions are necessary for the present a oon adjust itself to its proper scale, and the move ments and interchanges between the East and West that wait upon navigation be comm with whatever vigor the demand in either section shall warrant. What the course of trade is to be to the near f store is a question not free from many contingencies which rander it more than u-naily uncertain. But the season advances with a grow-ing confidence on the part of increanties commuand upon a scale much pearer the legitimate than has existed at any time since the breaking out of the rebellion. The rapid melting away of the form of the Confederacy-for it has no longer a form of the Consecracy—or it has no longer a substance—gives gravitying profiles of a speedy return to the old order of things, with its founding afrantages to trade, and the riturn of the armies to the avordions of peaks, quick-ning the intestry and adding power to the energy of the country, while at he same time increasing the consumptive demand for all the necessaries in the proportion

hatthe realize more for their labor, afford reason areliantory for she expectation that the business of the year through the legitimate channels of trade a to by among the best the country has ever seen he West will unquest quably receive the lim's share, if she is true to her interests in pursuing a straightforward course, and knoping shear from the derancing influences of speculation. The East is a dentitedly well migh emptied of her stores, and rom the granaries and storehouses of the West, new platheric with the great stavles, must the per g'e of the country in great part be fed. It is upon presents country in great part seriod. At it upon this hypothesiz that her merchants are now both ing firmly to their stocks and keeping margins well up. If they but exercise a true sconomy in this, and remain on the prudent side, availing the danger of exciting speculation in others and steer-ing ciers of it themselves, their prospert y will am
